

A free app and networking help to get a job in the Andalusian rural areas

LOCATION: Vélez de Benaudalla (Granada)

DURATION: 1:33

SUMMARY: Looking for a job with a smartphone is now possible thanks to the free app 'Guadalinfo Videocurrículum', created by Francisco Javier Lafuente, monitor at the Guadalinfo Centre of Vélez de Benaudalla, a town located in the province of Granada. In this app, which also has a site, hundreds of offers are published every day. It also allows user to upload their video-curriculum and offers advice to start a company. 69 Andalusian towns have joined this project that intends to avoid rootlessness and activate job searching in rural areas.

"The origin of the project is the web site. The mobile app's aim is to make things easier to people who maybe find it more comfortable than writing at guadalinfovideocurriculum.com. With just one touch they can go to job offers. I wanted to make job searching easier."

Daily, the Guadalinfo Videocurrículum site publishes more than one hundred job offers in Spain and Europe.

MÓNICA DELGADO
User

"I haven't been using this tool for long, barely a few months because I have just become unemployed; but it is true that some offers are very interesting although I am still thinking about moving."

Apart from publishing offers it also permits to upload a video-curriculum.

AMBIENCE

"And employment counselor is the last job I have done at the Andalusian Government."

That could be viewed by enterprises. It also offers advice for those who decide to start their own company.

"To get to the whole world. As monitors are implied it helps people who live in towns with less than 10.000 inhabitants or more than 20.000 giving them access to job searching for free, above all for free."

69 Andalusian towns have already joined this project that intends to make easier to find a job to people who live in rural areas.
