

Titiribici: 20.000 kilometres by bike to take puppets and smiles to South America

LOCATION: Seville

DURATION: 1:36

SUMMARY: A puppeteer from Seville will travel 20.000 kilometres by bike to take a free puppet show to some areas of South America where they have never seen this type of theatre. Pablo Olías is 'Titiribici', who will invest the sponsor's money in small cooperation projects he finds in his travel that will last two years.

VTR:

20.000 kilometres by bike looking for hundreds of children's smiles. That's the plan of this puppeteer for the next two years. A long trip through South America in the company of these curious friends.

"The main idea and what motivates the project is giving away a smile. For me is in fact the most important thing."

A job in which he already has experience, and that is the reason why we left his architecture studies.

"Obeying your dreams, listening to yourself and knowing exactly what you want to do."

He has been spreading dreams with his 'Titiribici' since sixteen years ago, travelling around Europe with Numa, Pegolete and Stawiski, partners he created with his own hands.

"Yes, I make them with my hands, using a gouge and a knife, they come out of a bit of wood."

"They are people with no muscles hold by someone."

His idea is going around the south of the continent, but not just to perform with his puppets.

"I am very motivated about helping so directly, a small school that needs desks or fixing an orphanage's roof."

He says that it is dangerous making a profession out of dreams and that's why he prefers returning to its altruist origins, to create dreams in others with each pedalling.
