

Music on wheels with orchestral performances on the bus to spread culture

LOCATION: Granada

DURATION: 1'37"

SUMMARY: Several musicians for the Granada City Orchestra have gotten on the buses which link the city center with the surrounding villages. Their goal is promoting public transportation and culture. It is also a way to motivate travelers to assist to one of the concerts this orchestra will start to perform in September.

VTR:

These violins are playing a piece by Mozart on a bus. Piotr and Milos are musicians at the Granada City Orchestra. Their goal is promoting public transport and culture with the support of the Metropolitan Consortium of Transportation.

HÉCTOR MANUEL GACHS
Metropolitan Consortium of Transportation

"We combine the needs of citizens, of people, of bus users, with the taste for music, for culture."

This bus links the city center of Granada with the village of Alfacar. During the trip, these two musicians perform several pieces for the travelers, who are amazed by this new experience.

MILOS RADOJICIC
Violin Granada City Orchestra

"Playing this way is a challenge. But when you see the audience's reaction, of the people on the bus, is positive, you feel rewarded."

PIOTR WEGNER
Violin Granada City Orchestra

"The first time I played we were driving at 50 km per hour, with a lot of bends, but it was good, very interesting."

This is a nice surprise for the travelers, makes the journey more pleasant.

"It's a good idea. In addition, music is a good way to reach people."

TRAVELERS

"Everybody likes music. Some like a type of music, and others like a different type, but they always love music."

"It is good because we have fun. The heat becomes more bearable."

Travelers would love to always share the bus with these two musicians, and they would like them to assist to one of the concerts that their orchestra will start to perform in September.
